The Paradox of Constitutionalism:

constituent power and constitutional form

This book sets out to examine some of the key features of what we describe as the paradox of constitutionalism: whether those who have the authority to make a constitution - the 'constituent power' - can do so without effectively surrendering that authority to the institutional sites of power 'constituted' by the constitutional form they enact. In particular, is the constituent power exhausted in the single constitutive act or does it retain a presence, acting as critical check on the constitutional operating system and/or an alternative source of authority to be invoked in moments of crisis? These questions have been debated both in different national contexts and at the level of constitutional theory, and these debates are acknowledged and developed in the first two sections of the book.

Part I includes chapters on how the question of constituent power has been treated in the constitutional histories of USA, France, UK and Germany, while Part II examines at the question of constituent power from the perspective of both liberal and non-liberal theories of the state and legal order. The essays in Part III consider the operation of constitutionalism with respect to a series of contemporary challenges to the state, including those from popular movements below the level of the state and challenges from the supranational and international levels, and they analyse how the puzzles associated with the question of constituent power are played out in these increasingly important settings

The Paradox of Constitutionalism

- Promotes the subject of constitutional theory as a distinct mode of inquiry, developing a neglected subject that is rapidly growing in importance;
- Draws together the expertise of scholars from a range of jurisdictions and disciplinary backgrounds;
- Examines the practices of constitutionalism and the issue of constituent power in a variety of sites beyond the nation state, including the United Nations, the European Union and sub-state territories;
- An exhaustive bibliography gives extensive reading list of literature in a range of European languages on constitutionalism.
Contents

List of Contributors ix

Introduction 1
Martin Loughlin and Neil Walker

1. Constituent Power and Reflexive Identity: Towards an Ontology of Collective Selfhood 9
Hans Lindahl

I. A CONCEPTUAL HISTORY OF CONSTITUENT POWER

2. Constituent Power Subverted: From English Constitutional Argument to British Constitutional Practice 27
Martin Loughlin

3. Constituent Power and Constitutional Change in American Constitutionalism 49
Stephen M. Griffin

Lucien Jaume

5. ‘We are (afraid of) the people’: Constituent Power in German Constitutionalism 87
Christoph Möllers

6. People and Elites in Republican Constitutions, Traditional and Modern 107
John P. McCormick

II. THE ARTICULATION OF CONSTITUENT POWER: RIVAL CONCEPTIONS

7. The Politics of the Question of Constituent Power 129
David Dyzenhaus

Rainer Nickel
Contents

9. Constitutionalism’s Post-Modern Opening
   Paolo Carrozza
   169

10. Against Substitution: The Constitutional
    Thinking of Dissensus
    Emilios Christodoulidis
    189

III. EXTENSION AND DIVERSIFICATION OF CONSTITUENT POWER

11. The Exercise of Constituent Power in Central and Eastern Europe
    Ulrich K. Preuss
    211

12. ‘We the Peoples’: Constituent Power and Constitutionalism in Plurinational States
    Stephen Tierney
    229

13. Post-Constituent Constitutionalism?
    The Case of the European Union
    Neil Walker
    247

14. ‘We the Peoples of the United Nations’: Constituent Power
    and Constitutional Form in International Law
    Bardo Fassbender
    269

15. Constituent Power and the Pluralist Ethic
    Damian Chalmers
    291

16. The Imperialism of Modern Constitutional Democracy
    James Tully
    315

Bibliography

Index

339
369